

that were the most important concerns of the employer. First, we assumed a simple rectangular cube. A deep gap in the middle provided this opportunity so that we could bring in the garden's nature inside the building through lighting and a long pool. The central general spaces that were consisted of the entertainment area on the lowest floor, and the living area and dining area on the ground and first floors were designed in such manner that while being independent, they would also have sight to each other through transparent levels and this way the space would act as a whole unit. We answered a complex question with a simple question. We established a friendly linkage between the family and nature in an artistic space. This job was done without any additional costs, creating an exciting interaction among the floors. Our view regarding this concept is a profound look for maintaining the mutual respect between man and nature on a regional scale, so that this path continues in that region.
