

Description

The design principles of this project are meticulously crafted to create communal spaces for celebrations and gatherings, while also catering to the owner's need for private sanctuaries and privacy. One unique feature of the villa is that the courtyard is situated at the back of the building, separated from the main facade and parking area. This placement ensures that the courtyard and private areas of the villa remain secluded and at the center of the structure. In addition, the desire for a peaceful space away from the main reception and party hall led to the creation of more secluded private spaces and bedrooms on a single floor. These spaces are connected by a deep balcony, allowing for different activities to take place simultaneously, making the villa more energy-efficient during periods of lower occupancy and contributing to reduced energy consumption.

The villa's shape features broken lines and geometric lozenges that create corners. This design not only allows for expansive balconies but also provides captivating views. The broken lines also serve the purpose of shading areas that receive intense sunlight, ensuring thermal comfort. The construction materials used are prominently displayed and exposed, showcasing the beauty and pride of the project's architecture. The intelligent construction techniques used eliminate the need for meticulous finishing stages, reducing material consumption and costs, and ultimately supporting environmental conservation.

"Corner Villa" prioritizes the owner's lifestyle and preferences and creates private spaces for hosting events and relaxation. The villa's courtyard is strategically placed at the rear, away from the parking area, and cozy, peaceful spaces are formed through a deep balcony that connects them to the main building. Additionally, the villa's form utilizes broken and lozenge-shaped lines for visual appeal and shadow play, and construction materials are prominently and exposedly used without the need for meticulous finishing. "Corner Villa" combines lifestyle and privacy in a harmonious fusion that embraces nature, human connection, and contemporary design.
